VISUAL ARTS / LAST CHANCE / "Static Drawings"

New York artist Stephen Sollins is, at heart, a recycler. He uses everyday objects and transforms them into art that reflects communication -- or the lack of it. In his "Static Series," which he started in 2002, Sollins takes art, television or sports listings from newsprint and erases -- with white-out -- elements to create repetitive patterns. Through this visual exercise he expresses the monotony of life and the passing of time.
